

1 ABSTRACT

2 An event, such as a security-related event, is received from a first security
3 engine or another source. A second security engine is identified that is configured 4 to utilize information contained in the event. The information contained in the 5 event is then communicated to the second security engine. Additionally, other 6 information, such as system state information, can be provided to one or more 7 security engines.